

This is a simple sentence as a paragraph, wrapping automatically on to new lines. Each automatically returned line doesn't indent — only new paragraph lines indent. Two new lines will make a new indented paragraph.

This is the new paragraph. By using `\\` I'll be able to linebreak without making it a strict new paragraph here ...

...great for forcing explicit line breaks without making it a strictly new paragraph.

I can also force the line to fill with `\hfill \break ...`

...like this!
